Why are the values important in understanding of individual and organizational behaviour ?

(c) Emotions are an effective state of consciousness in which joy, anger, tear, hate, love & sorrow are expressed. Utkarsh, as a management trainee, in a private Bank found it difficult to express as despite claims of open-minded organization, the seniors in the bank always insisted on tightly capped conduct during working hours. Usually the personal & professional emotions can not be compartmentalised and Utkarsh found it extremely difficult to force emotions tightly bottled in. The failure of organization culture at the bank resulted into serious discomfort, attrition and communication break-down. The overall working environment of the bank could not muster the desired result as compared to other branches of the state. The junior management started committing mistakes due to perceived fear out of closed culture. The performance indicator of the branch of the bank suggested that as most inefficient branch. 6
