Kumar had a minor brush with the law, when at age 18, he stole a camera from a camera shop. He was found guilty and sentenced to two years in prison. He came from a good family and even though he did not go to college, he had completed high school. In prison, he felt ashamed of what he had done and vowed to be always truthful and honest in his dealings. He became determine to work hard and be successful so that he could leave his criminal past behind and be proud of himself and also make his family proud of him.

After coming out of jail, he was worried if he would be able to get a job With no college education and with a criminal record, there were many obstacles in getting a job. A friend of the family told Kumar that there was a job available as a loading handyman at a major company that was a wholesale distributor of automobile tyres. This family friend knew the manager of the distribution centre and he had said a few good words about Kumar to him.

When Kumar went to see the manager, Mr. Patel, for an interview, he explained to Mr. patel his prison background but asked for a chance and promised to work hard at the job. Our perception, generally is that once a criminal, always a criminal. Accordingly, Mr. Patel was at first skeptical about hiring Kumar but decided to put his trust in him and gave him the job. Only Mr. Patel knew his criminal background. http://www.csvtuonline.com

Kumar worked very hard, honestly and diligently and completed his college degree on a part time basis. In 20 years, when Mr. Patel retired, Kumar became the distribution manager for the company.

Kumar had been the manager for one year when Ramesh came to him for a job as a loading operator for loading tyres on to the trucks. Ramesh also had gone to jail for stealing and he told Kumar about it but asked for another chance and promised to be an honest worker.

Kumar, recalling his own problems with the law 23 years ago, gave him the job. Soon, Ramesh became friendly with everyone and did his job very well.

Ramesh had been working for about six months when another dock worker complained to the manager that his wallet with money in it was missing. Ramesh, because of his past became the first suspect. Kumar confronted Ramesh and asked him about the missing wallet. Ramesh assured him that he had nothing to do with it. Kumar was very upset about the incident but believed Ramesh. He was considerably relieved when the wallet was found a few days later. http://www.csvtuonline.com

A new clerk in the personnel department, while updating the personnel files, came across the information regarding Ramesh's jail term. It became common knowledge when the clerk mentioned it to some associates, rather innocently, that it was very nice of the company to give convicts a second chance.

The following day, some money was discovered missing from the petty cash in the book keeping area. Another worker claimed that he had seen Ramesh in that area on that day. Naturally all eyes were on Ramesh. Someone even suggested that Ramesh had stolen the wallet earlier but returned it when he was questioned. Several employees asked Kumar to fire Ramesh as he could not be trusted. When confronted, Ramesh denied any knowedge of the missing money from petty cash.

Kumar had a big dilemma on his hands. If he fires Ramesh while he is acutally innocent, it would be a burden on his conscience. It he does not fire Ramesh, he would lose everyone's trust and the working environment would be very tense. The evidence was purely circumstantial but everyone perceived Ramesh to be a thief and believed that he stole the money. http://www.csvtuonline.com

Questions :

(i) What more information would Kumar require, if any, before he decides whether to fire Ramesh or not?

(ii) Why did everyone believe that Ramesh has stolen the money when nobody had seen him doing so? Is the perception, "A thief is a thief, is a thief, is a thief justified? Can a thief never become an honest man? Explain your reasons.
